The Honorable Bill Sheffield, Governor, State of Alaska; The Honorable Don Bennett, President, Alaska Senate; and The Honorable Ben F. Grussendorf, Speaker, Alaska House of Representatives Juneau, Alaska

It is with mixed emotions that the Alaska Human Rights Commission transmits to you the report of our activities in 1984. We on the one hand are pleased with what has been accomplished and at the same time are frustrated because our goals were not achieved to the degree to which we had aspired.

This report summarizes our efforts to respond to the declared needs of the growing number of Alaskans. They still hear the promise of the Alaska Legislature, when 20 years ago it declared via its policy and the Alaska Human Rights Law, that unlawful discrimination would be eliminated and prevented. These Alaskans demand, expect and deserve the fulfillment of that promise. Alaskans suffering from unlawful discrimination are, in increasing numbers, demanding the promised service from the Human Rights Commission. In the early years of my term as Commissioner, I found the resources of the Commission to be throughly taxed in the effort to keep the promise. This was so even as other agencies of State Government were expanding their capability to do their mandated tasks. More recently I find the resources of the Human Rights Commission being reduced. In other words, we were not included during the expansion phase of State Government, but have shared in the loss of resources during the reduction and reallocation phase. Our response has been to do more and better with less. We are proud of what has been accomplished, but we nevertheless understand that we are fast approaching the point of diminishing returns.

What has been accomplished is reflected in the staff narrative reports, the case processing statistics and perhaps most realistically in the sanitized case histories drawn from the investigative files of the Commission. We have made progress, but even these 20 years of progress cannot be portrayed as eliminating discrimination.

The Commission is dismayed that the general Alaskan public would accept with amusement the formation of the Alaska Association of White Men. We shudder as we recall that the Ku Klux Klan was also perceived as humorous by many people who were disbelieving of the bigotry of its purpose. We hope that this is not an omen for Alaska's future. Many parts of this nation are suffering the ills of discriminatory harasment. Many local and state governments have enacted legislation prohibiting this type of harasment. Alaska's needs are no different as the seeds of such illegal behavior have been sown here and could prosper if not thwarted. We implore you to react favorably to the enactment of legislation prohibiting discriminatory harasment. Additionally, we Commissioners call upon the Sheffield Administration and the members of the Fourteenth Legislature to signal your continued support for the promise made to Alaskans that unlawful discrimination be eliminated and prevented. We have the motivation and the mechanism. We, the Alaska State Commission for Human Rights, need the resources.

James H. Chase

Alaska State Commission for Human Rights

Program activities of the Human Rights Commission during 1984 were characterized by growth: growth in number of Alaskans served; growth in the agency's capability in providing its services; and growth in the staff's public education efforts to prevent unlawful discrimination. In 1984, more cases were filed, more cases were resolved and more settlements were negotiated through the Commission. The number of complaints filed in 1984 increased by 29 percent over 1983; the number of closures rose by 17 percent and the settlement benefits awarded to Complainants totaled $1,574,276 - an increase of 12 percent over the previous year.

In response to the continuing trend of increased filing of new complaints in the face of reduced staff resources, the Human Rights Commission embarked on a course of major program improvements and expanded public education efforts in 1984.

Foremost among the array of management innovations during the past twelve months was the adoption of a new case processing strategy implemented in April 1984. This new approach to investigation and resolution of complaints utilizes goal setting, timeframes for investigations, resource shifting, and other management tools to increase the number of case resolutions per investigator resulting in higher staff productivity. The previous approach to case processing provided for an early resolution attempt on all incoming cases with those cases failing early settlement becoming a backlog to be assigned for further investigation as staffing resources permitted. In contrast, the new strategy sets a goal of 180 days for completion of each case filed after April 1, 1984. The new standards for processing these cases mandate that on individual complaints:

- 3) investigation of cases alleging retaliation for filing a complaint be completed within 90 days of filing and
- 4) cases over 180 days in process be identified for special management review.

Because these new standards apply only to newly filed cases, a special Inventory Reduction Project was commenced simultaneously shifting existing staff resources throughout the agency to resolve cases already in process over 180 days. Based on the success of this project—more than two-thirds of the original pool of 74 cases have been resolved resulting in over $35,416 in benefits to Complainants—the Commission assigned new duties at year end to Southeastern Region Director and leader of the Inventory Reduction Project, Patsy Fletcher. Fletcher, as Case Processing Coordinator, will monitor cases in the investigative units and serve as agency liaison with worksharing agencies.

Compliance monitoring of the new case processing standards was facilitated by the implementation of a computerized docket of cases. This management information system (MIS), developed by an agency task force headed by Administrative Assistant Katherine Goodell, utilizes new wordprocessing equipment purchased in 1983. The MIS not only logs cases but also captures milestones in the processing of each case, computes elapsed days in process, and tabulates other case characteristics. These technological capabilities enable regional managers and the executive director to audit compliance with the case processing standards, to correct imbalances in the unit workloads, to evaluate the overall effectiveness of the program, and to provide other special assessments of the inventory of cases as needed.

Case production in 1984 was further boosted by the professional staffs growth in technical knowledge and investigative skills. Five investigators completed on-the-job training modules and were promoted through the flexible staffing system in the Human Rights Field Representative series.

Several professional growth activities took place throughout the year. During the second week in April an in-house training session coordinated by Northern Regional Director Cathi Carr-Lundfelt brought investigators and managers together for intensive classroom training on case law, Commission Decisions and Orders, legal theories of discrimination, and investigative and conciliation techniques. Commission Attorney Nancy Gordon, Hearing Advocate Mark Ertischek and senior staff members served as trainers in addition to Chairperson James Chase who presented his unique approach to understanding affirmative action, Commissioner of Administration and former Human Rights Commissioner Lisa Rudd who recounted the historical events leading to the creation of the Commission in 1963, and Anchorage Equal Rights Commission Executive Director Paul Connerty who shared his special expertise in crisis intervention. Other training opportunities afforded staff during 1984 were attendance at federally funded conferences on housing discrimination and case management. Senior staff attended the Employment Discrimination Law Workshop sponsored by the Alaska Chapter of the American Association for Affirmative Action held in Anchorage in late May. Legal training for Commissioners is a regular part of each Commission meeting and legal advice and updates on court decisions are routine agenda items at senior staff meetings.

As part of management's continuing search for efficiency in case processing, agency procedures have been streamlined and new regulations adopted in 1984. Standardization of the plan of investigation and case analysis memorandum, elimination of cover letters and the routinization of case actions were streamlining measures developed during the past year. Agency regulations were amended to simplify reconsideration procedures, eliminate most certified mail requirements, and clarify record-keeping requirements. Revisions to the agency procedures manual reflecting these changes are now in

SEXUAL HARASSMENT ON THE JOB

An Alaska Native female alleged that she had been denied a job as a kitchen helper because she refused the sexual advancements of the project manager. Although the project manager denied making any sexual advances, the staff found there was substantial evidence to credit the allegation. As a result of conciliation, Complainant received $4,000 in backpay.

BIAS AGAINST MALE APPLICANTS

A male job applicant was told at the time of his application that the owner of the business did not like to hire males. The Commission staff found that sex was not a factor in the decision not to hire the Complainant, but the business owner agreed to maintain a work atmosphere free of bias and to guard overt expressions of bias by her employees.

progress. This revised manual will provide a handy reference for staff on standard operating procedures and will contain new forms and formats for agency documents adapted for word-processing equipment.

Finally, another essential component of the new case processing strategy was the strengthened commitment to worksharing with other civil rights enforcement agencies whose enabling legislation and case processing provides comparable rights and remedies for Complainants. The Alaska Commission which has participated in worksharing with the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) since 1973 and with the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) since 1982 was pleased to support the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission (ERC) in efforts to obtain federal funding for complaint resolutions. In July, the ERC was awarded a contract from the EEOC bolstering the municipal agency's capacity to investigate cases. Through worksharing agreements with ERC and the EEOC, the Commission is able to provide the broadest protection for Complainants by dualfiling complaints with these agencies. While the case is in process at the worksharing agency, the Commission refrains from investigation. When the worksharing agency has entered its final action on the case, the Commission adopts the determination on the case when the requirements of state law have been met, avoiding duplication of effort. The MIS serves this relationship by generating reports on cases in process throughout the worksharing system. The EEOC, which is now moving toward a telecommunications linkage with Fair Employment Practice Agencies across the nation, recently surveyed its contracted agencies to determine the status of case data retrival systems in use throughout the nation. The Alaska Commission is in the vanguard of agencies now using computer-based case management systems.

Informing the public about the Alaska Human Rights law is a daily educational activity in all the offices of the Commission as staff respond to inquiries by telephone, by mail or personal contact. Over 2,538 such inquiries were handled in 1984. Because the Commission's three offices are located in urban centers, collect calls are accepted from rural

NON-DISCRIMINATORY DISCHARGE

An Alaska Native female complained of race and parenthood discrimination after she was discharged from her housekeeping position. The investigation showed that neither her race nor the fact that she had two children was a factor in Respondent's decision. Commission staff found no substantial evidence of discrimination and the case was closed.

UNLAWFUL RACIAL STEREOTYPING

A Black maintenance worker alleged that he was disciplined and ultimately discharged because his appearance and lifestyle suggested the stereotype of a drug dealer. Investigation revealed that, while the Black workers' performance was marginal, a White worker with similar behavior and poor performance was not disciplined and continued to be employed until he abandoned the job. The Black employee received a monetary settlement of $4,000.

Alaskans seeking the advice on matters pertaining to discrimination or referral to other sources of assistance.

A major public education effort took place in February 1984 when the Commission responded to the invitation of the Seafood Advisory Committee to conduct a two-day workshop on equal employment opportunity and affirmative action. The Seafood Advisory Committee is part of the Alaska Job Service Employer Committee formed under the Alaska Department of Labor Job Service Improvement Program. The Commission enlisted the services of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs, the Washington State Human Rights Commission, the Seattle Human Rights Department and the Tacoma Human Relations Commission to provide a comprehensive picture of the federal, state and local civil rights enforcement agencies with jurisdiction over the employment practices of the Washington and Alaska based seafood processors. This joint public education effort was well attended and enthusiastically received by the industry.

Another example of the cooperative efforts of federal and state civil rights agencies was the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission's Voluntary Technical Assistance Program for Alaskan employers held in August 1984 in Anchorage. Both Commission Attorney Nancy Gordon and the Executive Director were featured speakers together with top civil rights staff from the EEOC District X, Seattle and the EEOC headquarters in Washington, D.C. including EEOC Commissioner William Webb.

The Commission's educational efforts in the area of housing discrimination were closely allied with the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission. The Commission co-sponsored with ERC the a Fair Housing Seminar in Anchorage on September 11, 1984. Aimed at landlords, realtors, and property owners who must comply with state, federal and municipal fair housing laws, the seminar featured speakers of national and local renown and was videotaped for replay to other audiences.

The Commission's other outreach effort in the housing sector

DISCHARGE BEFORE RETIREMENT

A 64 year-old-man filed a complaint of age discrimination alleging that his employer discharged him from his auto mechanic position after four years of employment and one year before he could be vested in the company's retirement plan. During the resolution conference, the parties agreed to a predetermination settlement giving Complainant a total of $16,383.

REFERENCES REASON FOR REJECTION

A female filed a sex complaint alleging that a gas station owner refused to hire her as a station attendant. At the resolution conference, the owner showed that only two people applied, the Complainant who had bad references and a male with good references who was hired. The owner also showed that females were employed as station attendants at this station and others that he owned. The staff found no substantial evidence to support the allegations.

has been through membership on the Community Housing Resource Board (CHRB). As a group of community representative, the CHRB monitors compliance with the Voluntary Affirmative Marketing Agreement concluded between the Alaska Board of Realtors and the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development in 1982.

During the past two years, the Commission in conjunction with the U.S. Department of Justice, Community Relations Service and the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission, has worked extensively with a Task Force composed of Anchorage based community groups to determine the need for legislation prohibiting discriminatory harassment. In September 1983, a community forum on Malicious Harassment was sponsored by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, the Alaska Black Caucus, Alaska-Korean Human Rights Commission, the Anchorage Native Caucus, Congregation Beth Shalom, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the League of United Latin American Citizens. A large audience gathered to hear Washington State Senator George Fleming speak on the Washington statute prohibiting acts of discriminatory harassment. That same evening, pledges were made by Senator Joe Josephson and Representative Joe Hayes to introduce such legislation in Alaska in the 1984 session. SB 406, prohibiting acts of discriminatory harassment was introduced by Senator Josephson in February 1984 with a much amended version passing the Senate at the end of the session. The Legislature adjourned before Josephson's bill was calendared in the House.

The Task Force, undaunted, approached the Commissioners seeking assistance in August 1984. Long-standing advocates of the concept of such legislation, the Commissioners responded by asking Governor Sheffield to include a bill prohibiting discriminatory harassment in the Administration's legislative package. At year's end, the Task Force received word that the Governor had responded favorably to the Commission's request and that working with the Commission Attorney, new legislation would be drafted for introduction in the Fourteenth Legislature in 1985.

NO REASONABLE ACCOMMODATION

A physically-handicapped male complained that he had been terminated for an allegedly poor work performance. The Commission staff found that the employer had made no meaningful attempt to reasonably accommodate his handicap. The employee was reinstated into his former position with 3 years' back pay.

FLEX TIME ON FRIDAYS

A member of the Worldwide Church of God complained that his employer refused to accommodate his need for Sabbath observances required by his religion. During the resolution conference, the staff negotiated a pre-determination settlement whereby the employer agreed to allow Complainant to start work on Fridays 30 minutes prior to the normal 8:00 a.m. reporting time so that Complainant could complete a full work day prior to sunset on Fridays.

SOUTHCENTRAL REGION

Evelyn A. Ramos

The Southcentral Region covers the most densely populated areas of the state. Its boundaries extend from Unalakleet to Delta Junction on the north, the Copper River Basin on the east, from Kodiak Island to the Aleutian Chain on the south, including the populous Municipality of Anchorage and the Matanuska-Susitna Borough, and from Bristol Bay to the Kuskukwim and Lower Yukon rivers to the west. Because it serves almost three-quarters of the state's population, the Southcentral Regional Office is responsible for more than half the total number of cases filed in all three Commission offices.

In 1984, a dramatic surge in the population of the City of Anchorage, the neighboring Matanuska-Susitna Borough, and in other parts of the region brought about a fierce competition for jobs in a region whose economy is dependent primarily on government, and on fishing, service and construction industries. As more and more people competed for limited employment opportunities, an increasing number of Alaskans suffered economic hardships and many of them, who felt that their difficulties were caused in whole or in part by discriminatory practices, turned to us for help. Such requests for assistance were manifested by the large increase in the number of inquiries received from the public and, more significantly, in the increased number of new complaints filed in our office.

Thus, the staff in the Southcentral Regional Office was challenged more than ever during 1984 to manage a much larger case inventory. To meet this challenge, we expended most of our time and effort in case processing. At the beginning of the year, we continued the practice begun in mid-year of 1983 of dividing investigative resources, half on the processing of incoming complaints and the other half on the processing of earlier-filed cases. As the volume of inquiries and new complaint-filings increased, in mid 1984 three of the four Southcentral investigators were assigned to incoming cases.

In 1984, careful planning of staff travel throughout the region facilitated and expedited case processing resulting not only in the rise in the number of new complaint-filings from rural Alaskans, but also in the expedited filings and investigation of complaints filed by some Alaska Native construction workers before construction season ended.

Other factors which also helped us manage our burgeoning inventory included worksharing with the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission and the transfer of a large number of our cases to the Inventory Reduction Project. Finally, the transfer of cases where the State is Respondent to the Southeast Regional office for processing allowed us to focus our energies on the remaining cases in the Southcentral inventory.

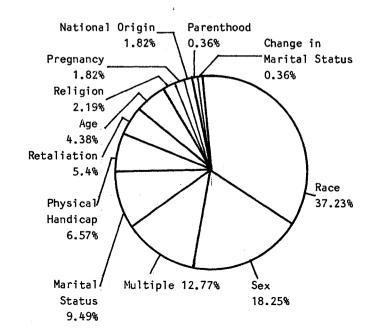

During 1984 we have sensed a need by the communities under our jurisdiction for a better understanding of the Commission's purpose and mission. More and more employers call on us for assistance on how they may comply with the law and an increasing number of persons seek our help in resolving situations which, however unfair they may appear, do not fall within the scope of the Alaska Human Rights Law. Our regional public education activities had been largely limited to those conducted by staff during investigative travels. In 1985 our challenge will be to create better ways and means to fill our public education needs in the face of our case processing priorities.

NORTHERN REGION

Cathi Carr-Lundfelt

For the most part, it has been a productive year in the Northern Region. The agency has been able to improve its level of services to northern constituents, even when faced with greater funding restrictions than in previous years.

Regional staff members increased their technical knowledge and improved their ability to conduct investigations by participating in agency-wide training activities. This meant in real terms that, as investigators gained technical knowledge and experience, they approached their work with greater confidence and less time was required to move cases toward resolution. At the same time, administrative staff improved their ability to manage the regional case loads.

Acknowledging that processing cases is an agency-wide, rather than a regional responsibility, the staff participated in two separate reviews of cases in process over 180 days pulled from Southcentral and Northern inventories. As a consequence, a number of these were assigned for special attention to the Inventory Reduction Project or to other units for processing This has meant that during 1984 none of the regional offices has had to suffer unduly from constraints of increases in complaint intake and/or decreases in staffing.

The staff also worked very hard to implement the agency's new case processing standards. Establishment of time lines for preparing the investigative plan and serving the complaint on the appropriate party, for holding investigative conference or obtaining responses to discovery, for submitting case analysis memos, and for completion of casework put everyone on short period. Completion of the required 90-day case analysis memo made our investigators "bite the bullet" on evidentiary questions because it takes as much analytical work to complete that memo as it does to do the predetermination memo recommending closure or conciliation. As a consequence, only cases needing significant additional investigation were being held in process much longer than 90 days.

The Commission has also improved its accessibility to northern constituents in a number of ways. The Commissioners held two of their quarterly meetings within Northern Regional boundaries: the first in Fairbanks in February and the second in Kotzebue at the end of May. When Commission meetings are held in such areas, local residents have a better chance to establish lines of communication, to present their views or their questions for agency consideration. These meetings were the first held in several years in the region and were well received.

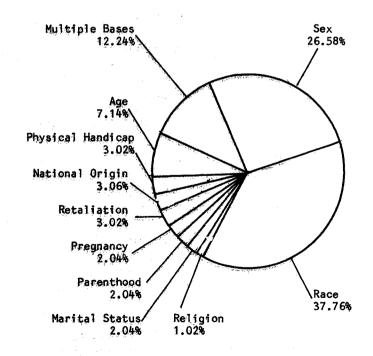

In addition, staff members continued to meet with the Fairbanks City Human Rights Commission and with members of other groups who have expressed interest in the implications of state laws against discrimination. Although the staff did not seek out opportunities to make presentations, they took advantage of those which did not conflict with their investigative duties. They also handled a variety of constituent inquiries concerning rights and responsibilities under the provisions of the Alaska Human Rights Law. Such inquiries represented approximately 15 times the number of actual complaints. Many were from employers who requested information on how to implement policies and procedures which would not violate employees' rights. Such inquiries are encouraging because they represent a more positive view of our agency's functions.

Finally, thanks chiefly to the efforts of Trudy Cain, the Governor's Special Assistant in Fairbanks, parties to complaints and persons making inquiries may meet with staff in greater privacy.

BASIS OF 1984 FILINGS NORTHERN REGION

SOUTHEASTERN REGION

Patsy M. Fletcher

The past year in the Southeastern Region has been one of change and increased productivity. Starting off 1984 with an extremely low case inventory, our workload has gradually increased not only through cases transferred from the Northern and Southcentral regions but also through an almost doubling of new complaints filed by Southeast residents.

A tremendous amount of energy has been expended to get the new case processing system instituted in April working and serviceable; however, it is paying off. Of the complaints filed after April 1, 1984, and being processed by the Southeast staff, over half have been closed with an average processing time of less than three months. The average age of those still open is just over four months old.

Another management decision effective in April has alleviated some of the case processing problems of all the regions. That decision proposed that all complaints filed against the State of Alaska after April be processed in the Juneau office regardless of origin. At first, the idea was met with some resistance, primarily from outside the agency. However, it has contributed to the equalization of the regional workloads. Southeast has established a productive relationship with the Division of Equal Employment Opportunity (which represents the State on all Human Rights complaints against the State of Alaska) resulting in resolution of over forty percent of State cases filed in other regions. Additionally, work on those transferred State complaints was completed in less than four months from the date of filing.

Because of the agency's case processing priority, Southeast efforts in the area of public education have been limited. We have served a record number of inquirers but have been unable to actively seek interaction with the public. Intercourse of that sort frequently has a broader impact on the elimination of discrimination than investigations of complaints filed by individuals.

While many of our new complaints are still generated by Juneau citizens, the majority of our increasing numbers of inquiries and filings are from smaller Southeast communities like Petersburg, Hydaburg, and Klawock. For example, one resident of a tiny Southeast village claimed that her son of mixed ethnic heritage was being denied library privileges at the small school he attends because of his race and because she had filed a previous complaint against the school. Another small town resident has alleged that a company failed to rehire her for a seasonal heavy equipment job because of her sex. She claims that the company owner told her he only hired her the previous year because of the EEO requirements of the federal contract he held but this year the contract was let through the State of Alaska and female hiring was not a specific requirement. Many of the complaints from the communities like Ketchikan, Wrangell and Hoonah reflect the depressed economic conditions and the tight competition for the few jobs which exist.

Although many Southeastern complainants list more than one basis of discrimination, almost half of all Southeastern complainants felt discriminated against on the basis of race or national origin while only one in five felt some bias on the basis of sex. Another one in five complainants alleged they suffered discrimination because of their ages or physical handicaps. Again, many of these complainants list age or physical handicap in combination with another basis such as race or sex. These statistics may reflect typical small town prejudices against persons of ethnicities different from the community majority, although a few of the race or national origin complaints were filed by white males.

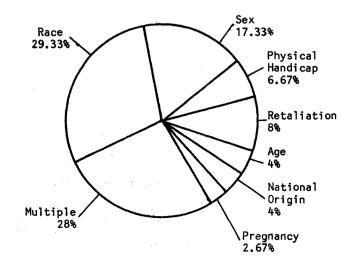

In summary, 1984 was a productive year both in terms of output of cases as well as progress in maximizing staff resources.

HEARING UNIT

Mark A. Ertischek

With a full staff in the Hearing Unit for the second consecutive year, we have made great progress in moving cases through the hearing process. At the beginning of 1984. thirty-seven open cases were listed on the hearing docket with an average age of over five years. By the end of the year, only nine cases remained open with the average age of cases down to two years. This analysis counts cases from certification of conciliation failure by the Executive Director through the proposed decision by the Hearing Examiners, and excludes cases in deliberation by the Commissioners. Also excluded are cases in which the parties have agreed to a settlement and cases remanded to the Commission by an appellate court. Two such remanded cases were in process by the Hearing Unit at the beginning of the year. one of which has been settled. Thus in 1984 the Hearing Unit has been successful in breaking the log jam of cases on the hearing docket by completing work on virtually all cases filed in previous years. Furthermore, due to our commitment to expedite the hearing process, in 1984 as soon as the investigative unit concluded that further attempts to conciliate the case were fruitless, the case was sent to the Hearing Unit for review and certification of conciliation failure. To the extent that funding is available in 1985, the Hearing Unit will further accelerate the progress of cases through the public hearing process.

Williams v. Union Oil - The Complainant alleged that he had been the victim of physical handicap discrimination. The hearing in this case was held during the last fiscal year. The Proposed Decision in favor of the Complainant, awarding him $38,956.84 plus interest at the rate of $8.40 per day from November 2, 1984 until paid, has been issued by the Hearing Examiner. We are awaiting Commission action on this case.

Complainant alleged pregnancy discrimination in employment. The hearing was held in June, 1984, and the parties have submitted their post-hearing briefs. We are presently awaiting a proposed decision from the Hearing Examiner.

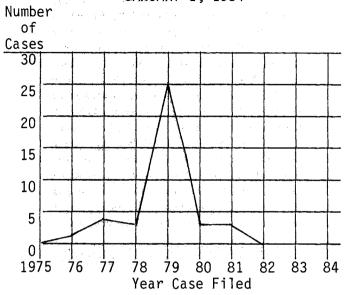

Jordan v. Alascom and Teamsters - The Complainant in this matter alleged religious discrimination due to the Respondent's failure to accommodate the Complainant's religious practices. The hearing was held in June of 1983, and the Proposed Order of the Hearing Examiner, finding in favor of the Complainant and awarding her $92,275, was entered on November 16, 1983. The Commission adopted the order on March 8, 1984. The Respondents chose not to appeal the case and paid the award.

Willets v. Fluor - The Complainant alleged retaliatory discharge after complaining of sexual harassment. The case was heard in February of 1983. The post-hearing briefing was completed in that year. On February 20, 1984, the Hearing Examiner issued a Proposed Decision finding in favor of the Respondents. The Commission adopted the Proposed Decision on June 15, 1984.

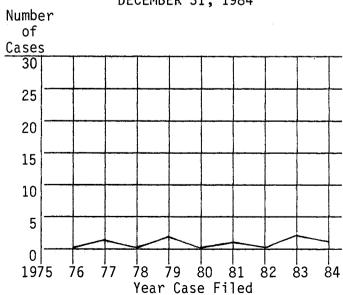

Nicholson v. O'Neill Investigations - The Complainant alleged failure to hire because of sex and age. The hearing was held during the summer of 1983. The Proposed Decision, finding in favor of the Complainant and awarding her $9,436 plus interest, was entered on June 15, 1984. The Commissioners have not yet entered a decision on the case.

Bradley, et al v. SOA, Dept. of Health and Social Services, and Dept. of Administration - The Complainants alleged sex discrimination in employment because of the failure to pay incumbents of a female-dominated job classification the same as a male-dominated job classification though the incumbents of both job classes performed comparable work. The hearing in this case was held during September and October of 1983 and lasted approximately seven weeks. The parties completed the last of their very extensive post-hearing briefs in June of 1984, and on November 23, 1984, a Proposed Decision, finding in favor of the Respondents, was issued by the Frank v. SOA-Health and Social Services, Division of Corrections - The Complainant alleged sex discrimination in wages. The case was settled prior to commencement of hearing. The settlement awarded the Complainant $10,085. Hawkins v. Alaska International Construction - The Complainant alleged failure to hire because of age discrimination. The case was settled the day before the hearing was to begin. The settlement awarded the Complainant $15,000.

Wallace v. Fluor Alaska - The Complainant alleged that he had been a victim of discriminatory employment practices and a retaliatory discharge. An Order finding against the Complainant on the discriminatory practices issue and in favor of the Complainant on the retaliatory termination was entered by the Commission. On appeal, the Commission's Order in favor of the Complainant on the retaliation issue was overturned, and the matter was remanded to the Commission for further hearings. The parties have agreed to a settlement, and the paperwork is presently being processed.

Ella Johnson v. International Brotherhood of Painters - The Complainant alleged sex discrimination in the dispatch of painters to union jobs. The parties have agreed to a settlement, and the paperwork is presently being processed.

Walker v. Jean Peters, d.b.a. My Apartments - The Complainant alleged discrimination in the rental of apartments. The parties have agreed to a settlement; the paperwork is being processed.

Laakso v. Southgate Hub - The Complainant alleged wrongful termination because of physical handicap discrimination. We are currently engaged in the discovery process, and we anticipate bringing the case to hearing in February, 1985.

INDIVIDUAL RELIGIOUS BELIEFS PROTECTED

Three employees who objected to labor union membership because of religious beliefs requested exemption from payment of union dues even though they were not members of an organized church whose tenets prohibited union membership. Their labor union claimed such an accommodation could only be granted to persons who belonged to a church or other organized religious body. The Commission staff concluded that Alaska Human Rights Law covered individuals with sincere beliefs which occupy the place religious beliefs occupy in the life of a believer.

bringing the case to hearing during the spring of 1985.

Perry v. State of Alaska, Dept. of Public Safety, Div. of Fish and Wildlife - The Complainant alleged physical handicap discrimination. The parties are engaged in settlement discussions.

We have certified the failure of conciliation efforts in the following cases: Pease v. Apollo Restaurant; Barletta v. SOA, Dept. of Education, Comm. on Post-Secondary Education; Corpus v. Totem Packing Company; Topacio v. Sheffield Enterprises, Inc. d.b.a. Baranof Hotel; and Myers v. Skagway City Schools. We have requested that the Attorney General's office obtain hearing examiners for each of these cases. We hope that hearings can be scheduled during the spring and summer of 1985. We have not completed our review of one case which was referred to the Hearing Unit. We anticipate completing this process in January 1985.

The mission of the Commission's Systemic Program is to identify major issues of discrimination throughout Alaska and to address such issues by initiating large-scale investigations and enforcing comprehensive settlement agreements. The Systemic Program also provides substantive training and technical assistance to employers, landlords, and others who are subject to Alaska's anti-discrimination statutes. In July of 1984, the Systemic Program's Director, Daveed Schwartz, resigned from the Commission. Subsequently, the Director's position has not been filled permitting management to absorb the loss of one position as required in FY 85 and to avoid layoff of current employees. As a result, the Systemic Program has been handled as an adjunct to the Hearing Unit. Its new role is to identify and initiate the investigation of discrimination with systemic implications and to conduct special investigations assigned by the Executive Director.

During the last calendar year, we continued to monitor compliance with agreements between the Commission and various Respondents and to conduct the investigations assigned to the unit. During the last year, we have conducted six investigations.

DISPUTED BACK PAY CLAIM

A woman filed a complaint alleging that she was forced to resign from her job because her employer sexually harassed her. The employer did not deny Complainant's sexual harassment allegations. The staff and Respondent could no agree on the amount of back pay claim and the case has been forwarded to the hearing unit.

SPOUSAL FRINCE BENEFITS REDUCED

A married couple worked for the same employer and received employee health benefits. Their employer told them that they could not claim each other as dependents even though employees with spouses who did not work for the employer were allowed to claim their spouses as a dependent. The staff concluded they were discriminated against when they received a less valuable fringe benefit because of their marital status.

Supreme Court, Decided

Pipeliners Union 798, United Association v. Alaska State Commission for Human Rights (ASCHR): The Court held: 1) AS 18.80.135(a) provides the exclusive means of reviewing an order issued by the Commission and therefore an order cannot be reviewed in an enforcement action filed pursuant to AS 18.80.135(b); 2) when an enforcement action is filed while an appeal under AS 18.80.135(a) is pending, the two actions should be consolidated; 3) the Union need not seek a stay of an administrative order that is not self-enforcing; 4) in a consolidated appeal and enforcement action a court may issue a judgment enforcing the Commission's order before that order is reviewed unless the court imposes a stay of the enforcement cause of action. Remanded to Superior Court.

RURAL PROGRAM

Catalino Barril

The primary activity of the Commission's Rural Program Director in 1984 was the creation of a comprehensive plan to educate Alaskans about the rights and responsibilities of human rights law. Other activities included the updating and publication of the Commission's statute and regulation handbook, conducting or participating in civil rights workshops, and liaison between the Commission and other civil rights agencies and organizations.

The comprehensive plan creates an educational program consisting of (1) a poster that will state the purpose of the Commission, the protected classes, the basis of discrimination, as well as the location of each of the regional offices, and will be printed in English, Yupik and Inupiat, (2) a booklet that will describe in very general terms the bases of discrimination, the procedures for filing a complaint, the investigative process and answer questions commonly asked by the complainant, (3) a series of pamphlets that will address subjects, such as employment, pregnancy in employment, sexual harassment, housing, and other subjects. Also planned as part of the educational program are public service announcements, a newsletter to be printed quarterly and, of course, workshops. Distribution of the posters printed in Yupik and Inupiat will be to local governments, village stores, and native regional and village corporations. All of the printed educational materials will be made available upon request, used as handouts at workshops, and/or mailed to state and local governments, as well as to the private sector.

The public education program will certainly generate more interest in civil rights in rural Alaska and as a direct result more complaints to our regional offices. The question then arises, "Does the Commission have the resources (a travel budget and trained investigators) to service rural Alaskans adequately and effectively? For if we cannot even minimumly service the rural Alaskans' needs, then we are giving false promises of assistance to their basic civil rights. We have in essence a two-edged sword.

Early in 1984, the Commission was invited by the Alaska Seafood Advisory Committee to conduct a workshop on equal employment opportunities and affirmative action. The U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Program, the Washington State Human Rights Commission, the Seattle Human Rights Department and the Tacoma Human Relations Commission joined with the Alaska Commission staff in producing a two day program for managers and front line supervisors employed by seafood processing companies doing business in Washington and Alaska.

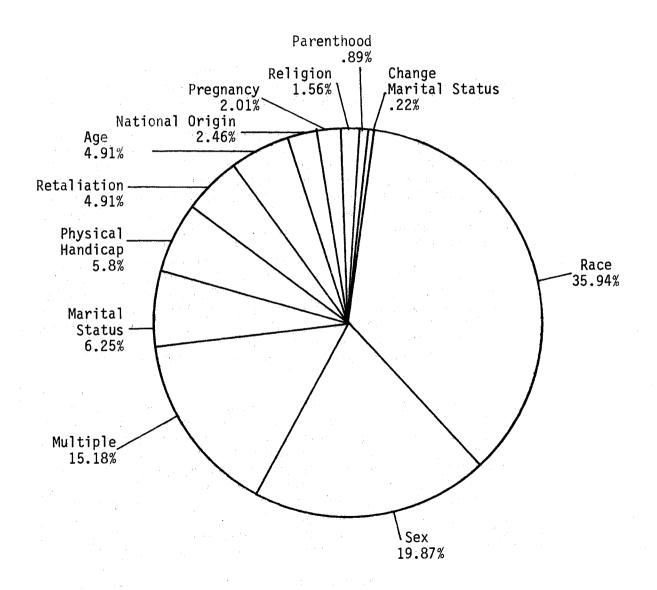

The Rural Program Director also served as the Commission's liaison with the Anchorage Equal Rights Commission in producing two workshops. The first was a workshop on contract compliance for unions, and the second was a fair housing workshop directed primarily at realtors, project managers and developers in the Anchorage area. The Rural Director also conducted a workshop on civil rights in Barrow. Attending were members of the North Slope Personnel Committee and major contractors doing business with the Borough. During the year, many top-level Native corporate managers have expressed their need to know more about both federal and state civil rights laws and affirmative action. To accommodate these requests, the Rural Director is currently planning a workshop in conjunction with the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Program.

The year was filled with researching, planning and preparation. The year that is upon us will see the implementation of what was accomplished in 1984.

SUMMARY: CASES FILED, CASES CLOSED AND ENDING INVENTORY, 1982 - 1984

These charts illustrate the success of the Commission in increasing productivity by resolving more cases over the past 3 years with fewer staff investigators.

During the same period, however, the number of cases filed each year has increased. This increased demand for services—despite increased case resolutions—has resulted in a growing inventory of cases in process at year end.

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY IN ALASKA STATE GOVERNMENT

Patsy M. Fletcher

The Alaska State Commission for Human Rights Commission is required by AS 18.80.060 (a)(6) to:

make an overall assessment, at least once every three years, of the progress made toward equal employment opportunity by every department of state government. Results of the assessment shall be included in the annual report made under Section 150 of this chapter.

Although time and resource constraints limited our assessment, this report attempts to present an accurate though brief evaluation of equal employment opportunity in the Executive Branch of Alaska State Government over the past two years, Rather than editorialize on statistics, a cursory assessment of the qualitative aspects of EEO progress will be discussed instead, Readers may draw their own conclusions from a review of statistical data.

The sources for this report include interviews with various EEO personnel and management professionals within state government; the Alaska State Commission for Human Rights Annual Reports for 1982 and 1983; Division of EEO Executive Branch Monthly Workforce Status Report, January 31, 1984 and October 31, 1984; and Administrative Orders No. 75 and 81.

During the past 20 years, employers have come to realize that an effective EEO program is the key to practicing sound, preventive law. Such a program also demonstrates the commitment of management to identify problems and to implement change voluntarily. The State of Alaska as an employer has made a such a commitment, articulated in Adminstrative Order 59 and later reemphasized by the current administration through Administrative Order 75 in April 1983:

STATE OF ALASKA WORKFORCE AS OF OCTOBER 15, 1984 (Permanent Full-Time Employees)

	NUMBER	NUMBER	T
RACE	MALES	FEMALES	TOTAL
WHITE	5,258	4,184	9,442
BLACK	166	144	310
HISPANIC	55	75	130
ASIAN/ PACIFIC ISLANDER	99	153	252
ALASKA NATIVE/ AMERICAN INDIAN	221	307	528
FOTAL	5,799	4,863	10,662

It is the policy of the Executive Branch of Alaska Government that all employees and applicants for employment shall be afforded equal opportunity in all aspects of personnel management.

Procedures for implementation which accompanied the antidiscrimination policy set forth in Administrative Order 75 were distributed to all departments and divisions. The policy required--for the first time--that agencies display a poster describing the state's EEO policy. The order also called for the establishment of departmental Affirmative Action Advisory Committees and set up an internal complaint procedure. In late 1984, the Governor signed a stronger policy and variation of Administrative Order 75, namely Administrative Order 81 which prohibited "discriminatory harassment," especially sexual harassment.

Other measures undertaken in the past two years towards the development of an effective EEO program included an attempt to codify the Division of EEO and its responsibilities through Senate Bill 395, introduced during the Thirteenth Alaska Legislature. After significant community interest and testimony, the measure died in the Senate Finance Committee. It was felt by many supporters of SB 395 that giving the Division of EEO statutory authority would preserve the State's current EEO stance and would protect it from later and perhaps less sympathetic administrations.

Since December 1983, departments have been required to provide monthly work force statistics on women and minorities to the Governor through the Division of EEO. This data is reviewed at cabinet meetings, where individual commissioners are called upon to comment on their departments' performance in the area of equal employment opportunity/affirmative action. Departmental staff have complained about the added paperwork burden created by new executive branch EEO reporting requirements. However, most departments admit the practice of discussing each department's compliance with the procedure at the cabinet level conveys the message that equal employment opportunity/affirmative action is a serious subject with the current administration.

Recognizing the important role recruitment plays in EEO. several departments have taken affirmative steps to expand their applicant pools through extensive outreach especially to Native communities. The Division of Personnel, Department of Administration, for example, conducted an extensive applicant search in Bethel and the surrounding communities for staff for the new state facility in Bethel. Community and civic groups, newspapers and other media were contacted to publicize the vacancies and visits were made to all the surrounding villages. In cooperation with Native organizations, other community organizations and Job Service, Division of Personnel staff conducted numerous workshops for managers and the general public on the application process. Testing and retesting was done locally with follow-up to ensure that the State's commitment was understood and that potential applicants were not missed or allowed to fall by the wayside. These efforts, though extensive and costly, resulted in a highly qualified staff of whom 60 percent are Native and, as an added benefit, 95 percent are local hires. In addition to the benefits of economic integration of this facility into the community, the department benefited from these efforts in two ways: their EEO statistics were enhanced; and their turnover rate will undoubtedly be lower because the facility will be staffed by local residents.

Other departments, Public Safety for example, have changed their recruitment periods to eliminate the conflict with traditional hunting or fishing seasons. Still others (Education and Fish & Game) have developed departmental recruitment bulletins and applicant assistance sheets. Job fairs have also been presented to teach prospective applicants about the complicated state application process and to provide information about available jobs to the public and particularly to the minority community. Many departments have active EEO/AA committees and have a departmental EEO officer.

Over the past year, new State Personnel Rules governing the register of eligible applicants have been implemented, expanding the certification procedure. This new expanded certification procedure requires that consideration be given to at least one member from each identified underutilized group for every classified job vacancy. As with other measures, EEO awareness has been heightened.

There have been criticisms of the data base employed by the Division of EEO in determining which groups are underutilized. Other critics contend that the expanded certification procedures still do not allow hiring authorities to reach obviously underrepresented minorities because white males are included as a "protected class". The general consensus, however, is that these procedures are more effective than the previous "5x5" registers which also sought to expose hiring authorities to qualified minority or female applicants.

Another drawback acknowledged by most users of the expanded certification procedures is the lack of clarity and affirmative initiative in the requirement to "consider" members of the underutilized groups. To "consider" an applicant could mean simply reviewing the application. There is no requirement to interview the candidate. Thus as pointed out by many, the success of the expanded certification procedures in increasing minority and women hires relies too heavily as with other current equal employment opportunity/affirmative action tools upon the goodwill of conscientious managers.

The degree of success of most equal employment opportunity programs is determined through quantitative measurements: increases in minorities and women in hiring, promotions, pay ranges, and non-traditional jobs, etc. While statistics can often be manipulated so that the true profile is not revealed and miniscule successes are inflated, they are often the best and certainly the easiest measures of progress. At the writing of this report Division of EEO had not compiled its end of the year report. Moreover, the Division of EEO has not developed an approved statewide Affirmative Action Plan in over two years. Division of EEO is currently working on a shell plan which will later be tailored to the particular department. This master plan is due for release within the next few months.

The Division of EEO has predicted the end-of-the-year report will show an almost 2% increase in hiring of minorities over the prior year; however, its report will contain no statistics regarding the upward mobility of minorities and women within the system, the number of hires resulting from the expanded certification procedures nor the number of women and minorities terminating service in State government. Neither will it contain data regarding the status of the aged or physically handicapped, other groups which are covered by Alaska Human Rights Law. Thus, while the number of minorities entering State service has increased, we have no information concerning the number leaving.

Overall, the percentage of minorities and women in State Government has increased since 1982:

Minorities have increased from 9.6 percent to 11.2 percent;

Females have increased from 44.8 percent to 45.4 percent.

On the other hand, the number of total state workers has decreased by 4 percent (by 489) as has the actual number of female employees (by 78) while there are a larger number of minorities (by 150) employed than in 1982.

Alaska Natives continue to be the largest minority group at 5.03 percent, followed by Blacks and Asians, at 2.75 percent and 2.27 percent respectively; and finally Hispanics at 1.19 percent. Blacks and Asians have seen the greatest increase.

In terms of salary, 81 percent of the females employed in State government still make less than $2999 per year as compared with 43 percent of all males in that same salary range. Of the minority males and females employed by the State, only 23 percent make above $3,000/-month. In the $72,000+/year salary range the number of women represented has increased from one in 1982 to nine in 1984. There have been no increases in the number of minorities at this range which remains at one.

The number of females in State Government has decreased slightly at the same time that their average pay has increased. This could reflect promotions of women to higher paying jobs or result from women being hired at higher salaries: it could also be attributable to cost of living increases. In fact, the salaries for all groups have increased, with males enjoying the greatest average increase and minorities the lowest. A larger proportion of minorities are represented at the lowest pay ranges. because minorities are not promoted as quickly as whites or is it simply because women and/or whites are not applying for low paying positions thereby increasing the opportunity for minority hire? Although the State salary system is set by pay range with associated dollar amounts, the statistics are maintained by broad salary amounts encompassing several pay ranges which does not sharply focus the representation of minorities and women. More complete statistical data would have provided a broader picture of the treatment of minorities and women in the State system and would leave less room for speculation and self-aggrandizement.

On the other hand, from many comments, the amount of time expended on data gathering for statistical reports could be better spent developing and conducting training, particularly for managers, to assist them to overcome their personal racial and sexual prejudices, and to demystify the concept of equal employment opportunity as a sound management tool. As stated previously, the extent to which tools such as executive commitment, expanded certification, and affirmative action plans effectuate positive equal employment opportunity change is dependent upon cooperation from supervisors and managers making employment decisions. Some have suggested that achievement in the area of equal employment opportunity be given more weight and added as a separate criterion in supervisory performance evaluations. The imposition of discipline as a result of negative equal employment opportunity performance is one of the more acclaimed aspects of Administrative Order 81 but is the only instance where state managers who discriminate or ignore discrimination suffer any penalties. Departments whose employees have been found to have intentionally or unintentionally violated the human rights of another person must absorb the liabilities themselves; but because of the lack of an established progressive disciplinary system, punitive action against discriminators has not been taken.

Other possible personnel deterrents to effective equal employment opportunity include the application rating system, employee service credits, mandatory consideration of collective bargaining unit members, and extensive use of departmental registers. Each of these factors favor promotion of employees within the system limiting opportunities for minorities seeking State employment. The classification study currently being conducted by Division of Personnel may assist in eliminating barriers to the employment of minorities and women through its review and recommendations regarding minimum qualification examinations and job classes. It may lead to the development of a workable upward mobility program, essential to the increase in equal opportunity for minorities and females. Clearly the State's outmoded method of classification has served in the past to keep minorities out of state government and relegated females to the lowest paying positions. A more modern approach adopted as a result of the study may go a long way toward correcting past problems.

In summary, the recent efforts in equal employment opportunity and affirmative action have resulted in an increase in the number of minorities in state government and an increase in the average pay of female workers. We have no information on the movement of these groups within the system nor on the effects of management tools such as the expanded certification procedures or the action plans outlined in Administrative Order 75. The data base and resultant statistics are uninstructive though there are plans for expansion. Thus, at this point, the minimal gains shown here are probably more the result of the increase in information disseminated coupled with subsequent goodwill of a handful of managers and frontline supervisors.
